Wukong watched them glide.
"Look! Flying feet!"
"I want to try!"

He put on his skates.
Clomp. Clomp.
"My feet have tiny sleds!"

Wukong curled under his quilt.
In his dreams,
he glided past the stars.
Slowly. Softly.
All the way to sleep.

The rink lights twinkled.
"See you soon, ice!"
His feet were tired.
His smile was not.

Helmet on. Mittens on.
Coach Otter checked
his skates.
"Ready for little steps?"

Wukong stepped onto the ice.
His feet slid apart.
"Wait for me, feet!"

They made a gentle circle.
Rabbit led. Pigsy followed.
Wukong glided along.
Six happy skates!

Then his feet found a rhythm.
Push… glide.
Push… glide.
"Look! I'm doing it!"

Whoops! Down he went.
His bottom met the ice.
"Hello, chilly floor."

"Learning takes practice,"
said Coach Otter.
"Let's get up together."

He came back to practice.
A little step. A little glide.
Wobbles and all.

They warmed their paws.
They watched the swirling snow.
"I'll try again," said Wukong.

Little steps. Bent knees.
"Like a penguin!" said Rabbit.
Wukong waddled and giggled.

Push… glide.
Push… glide.
One tiny slide!
Then another.

Then came another tumble.
"I thought I had it."
He sat beside Pigsy.
"Rest with me," said Pigsy.
