Bear's Wobbly Ride

One little pedal. One little try.

Bear liked slow mornings and soft grass.
But today, he wanted to learn something fun.
He found a little red unicycle.
“One wheel? I wonder…”

Bear held the oak tree.
He put one paw on a pedal.
“Here I go!”
Wibble. Wobble. Whoa!

Plop! Bear landed in the soft grass.
“Too wobbly,” said Fox. “You’ll never do it.”
Bear’s ears drooped.
Maybe Fox was right.

Rabbit hopped over.
“Hold my paw. We’ll go slowly.”
Bear took a breath.
One little pedal. One little try.

One pedal. Two pedals.
Rabbit let go.
Bear rode all the way to a daisy!
Then… plop. “That was two!” he laughed.

“Only two,” Bear told Tortoise.
“Two is more than one,” said Tortoise.
“Rest a little. Then try again.”
They shared a quiet, shady snack.

Each day, Bear practiced.
He learned to look ahead.
He learned to pedal gently.
One little pedal. One little try.

Some days, the wobbles came back.
“I’m tired of trying,” Bear whispered.
So he rested beneath the oak.
Tomorrow could wait.

Next morning, Bear tried again.
One pedal. Two. Three…
Past the oak. Around the bend.
He turned. He stopped. He did it!

Fox peeked out.
“I was wrong,” he said. “May I try?”
Bear smiled. “I’ll hold your paw.”
Fox wobbled. Bear stayed close.

As the sun sank low, Bear rode home.
Rabbit hopped. Tortoise plodded.
Fox padded softly beside them.
Round went the wheel. Soft went the day.

Bear tucked his tired paws into bed.
“Goodnight, little red wheel.”
He had learned something wonderful.
Now it was time to dream.

Goodnight, Bear.
Goodnight, wobbles.
Goodnight, one little try.
