Bumble's Big Bike Ride

One little pedal.
One little try.

Bumble Bear loved slow mornings. But today, he wanted to try something new. He found a little red bicycle. "Two wheels! I wonder..."

Goodnight, Bumble.
Goodnight, wobbles.
Goodnight, one little try.

Bumble climbed onto the seat.
One foot on a pedal. One on the ground. "Here I go!"
Wibble. Wobble. Whoa!

Plop! Bumble landed in the soft grass. "Too wobbly," said Fox. "You'll never do it." Bumble's ears drooped. Maybe Fox was right.

Bumble tucked his tired paws into bed. "Goodnight, little red bicycle." He had learned something wonderful. Now it was time to dream.

As the sun sank low, Bumble rode home. Rabbit hopped. Tortoise plodded. Fox padded softly beside them. Round went the wheels. Soft went the day.

Rabbit hopped over. "I'll hold the seat. We'll go slowly." Bumble took a breath. One little pedal. One little try.

One pedal. Two pedals. Rabbit let go. Bumble rode all the way to a daisy! Then… plop. "That was two!" he laughed.

Fox peeked out. "I was wrong," he said. "May I try?" Bumble smiled. "I'll hold the seat." Fox wobbled. Bumble stayed close.

Next morning, Bumble tried again. One pedal. Two. Three... Past the oak. Around the bend. He turned. He stopped. He did it!

"Only two," Bumble told Tortoise. "Two is more than one," said Tortoise. "Rest a little. Then try again." They shared a quiet, shady snack.

Each day, Bumble practiced. He looked ahead and held the handlebars. He learned to pedal gently. One little pedal. One little try.

Some days, the wobbles came back. "I'm tired of trying," Bumble whispered. So he rested beneath the oak. Tomorrow could wait.

